Fight for life after air horror

A pilot was in a critical condition in hospital yesterday following a crash at a British airport that killed at least seven people when his aircraft plunged into a busy road.

The Hawker Hunter military jet had to pull out of a loop at the Sheehan Airbase on the southeast English coast on Saturday, and hit several cars on the A27, creating a fireball that sent thick black smoke into the sky.

The pilot, Andy Hill, 49, was airlifted to hospital where he was in a critical condition, Sussex Police said, though they were unable to say whether he had ejected from the aircraft.

Two of those who died were named as Worthing United footballer Jacob Schilt, 23, and Mark Grimston, 24.

Portage of the crash showed the jet attempting to perform a loop high in the air, but it failed to complete the loop in time but that sent thick black smoke into the sky.

The pilot, Andy Hill, 49, was airlifted to hospital where he was in a critical condition, Sussex Police said, though they were unable to say whether he had ejected from the aircraft.

Police quiz train gunman

Police are interrogating a suspected jihadist gunman who was overpowered by passengers on a packed Amsterdam-Paris train.

Officials say he had visited Syria and was known to intelligence services.

The alleged attacker, named as 35-year-old Moroccan national Ayoub el Khazzani, opened fire with an assault rifle at Amersfoort Friday night, but was wrestled to the floor by three American passengers who have been hailed as heroes.

The shooting, which unfolded at the station facility by intelligence services, tracking an unprecedented number of potential jihadists, is expected to lead to tighter security for international train services in Europe.

Armed with a Kalashnikov assault rifle, a laser automatic pistol, size-catchers clips and a box cutter, the attacker opened fire on the high-speed train just after it crossed from Belgium into northern France.

A French passenger tried to disarm Khazzani as he left a toilet cubicle, but he got away and fired several shots.

Then a Franco-American traveler in his 30s climbed with the man and was shot and wounded. That the attack was quickly stopped when two off-duty US servicemen and their friend charged the gunman and restrained him.

"I looked back and saw a guy come with a Kalashnikov," said Alik Skarlatov, a 25-year-old member of the National Guard in Oregon who recently returned from Afghanistan. "My friends and I got down and then I said 'Let's get him'..."

The suspected Bangladeshi train bomber is escorted by police after the attack in France.

Bomb probe calls for patience

Killer blast at another chemical plant

An explosion at a chemical plant in eastern China killed one person and injured nine others, state media reported yesterday, 10 days after the chemical manufacturer in Tianjin killed 122 people.

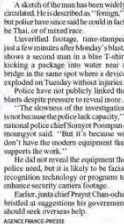

The incident happened just before 8pm on Saturday in the city of Zibo in Shandong province, Xinhua News Agency said.

Investigators put out the resulting fire just before 2am yesterday and the case was under investigation.

The victim was identified as a worker at the plant. Environmental authorities detected no contamination from the blast.

The facility owned by Shandong Huayang Chemical Technology Co produced adiponitrile, which can give off toxic fumes when burned. Adiponitrile is used in making nylon and other products.

The cause of the Tianjin disaster on August 12 is still under investigation, but state media say the warehouse - which was storing sodium cyanide and other dangerous chemicals - was located too close to residential areas and may have obtained flawed safety approvals.

An explosion triggered a fire at the Zibo factory, killing nine people, Xinhua.

Border dig reveals more bodies left by traffickers

Malaysian authorities have found graves near its border with Thailand containing the remains of at least 24 people believed to be victims of human traffickers.

The heavily forested border area spanning the peninsula has been a hot spot for smugglers taking people to other Southeast Asian countries by boat from Burma as well as Bangladesh.

But many of the people have been taken ashore then held for ransom in squalid camps and face torture and starvation.

Police said they uncovered 24 bodies Saturday in the Bukit Wang region across the Malaysian border with Thailand, which is close to where authorities in May found hundreds of bodies in abandoned camps.

Following on from the earlier operation and forensic discoveries, police said, the bodies of the 24 people who were described as "illegal immigrants" were dug up.

The remains had been handed over to pathologists by yesterday, but it was not clear if the newly discovered bodies were those of Rohingya, the minority ethnic group in Burma where they have suffered widespread persecution.

A crackdown by Thai authorities may drive traffickers to leave thousands of migrants and would-be migrants on rocky, overgrown banks in Southeast Asian waters.

The triggered a regional humanitarian crisis that saw them landed at Malaysia and Indonesia after being rescued by fishermen.

Police have not publicly linked the blast, despite pressure to reveal more.

"The absence of the investigation is because the police lack capacity," national police chief Suwanto Poompanmuang said. "But it's because we don't have the modern equipment that supports the work."

He did not reveal the equipment the police need, but it is likely to be facial recognition technology or programs to analyze security camera footage.

Earlier, jets of the Royal Chakraborty identified an suggestion his government should seek foreign help.
